Syrian father recounts life in E. Ghouta as ‘hell’

HATAY - A Syrian father has been living in Turkey since 2015 to seek treatment for his minor son who partially lost his hearing and speech following airstrikes by the Bashar al-Assad regime. Mohammed Recep, 29, who currently lives in southeastern Hatay province, recalled the “tales from hell”, a reference to the regime atrocities in his hometown Eastern Ghouta.

He lost his year-old baby boy Yesir and wife Sirgel in an airstrike on his house in 2015. “The bomb that hit our home was enough to make our lives miserable,” he said. “We lived in hell in Eastern Ghouta,” Recep said. “We were kept in captivity in our own land, and led a life in starvation and poverty.” The strike left his 5-year-old son Yousuf with... Turkey’s volunteer doctors treat 2,500 Syrians in camps

7,000 people provided medical services at 2 refugee camps, 6,000 medicines distributed

AZAZ - Turkey’s volunteer doctors have treated 2,500 Syrians living in refugee camps, an association official said Monday. A team of 67 people, including doctors and healthcare professionals, provided refugees in Mukaveme camp in Azaz town in Syria’s Aleppo with primary and secondary care on April 7-8. The “Healing with Goodness” project was carried out by Hayrat Humanitarian Aid Association. Clothes, shoes, coloring books, balloons, chocolates and waffles were distributed to the children who were examined. The team also treated children in the Igde camp where mostly Syrian Turkmens are residing. Doctors and healthcare professionals also circumcised 40 children. A total of 7,000 people from the two camps have been provided medical services at nine different branches, said Hamza Tugbay Ataman, general director of the association. He added... MORE DETAILS
